CONCEPT NOTE OF NATIONAL SEMINAR

Role of Cultural History in the Formation of Society

Cultural history is an encompassing term which incorporates the past, the present and the future. It includes various cultural representations and interpretations of historical experiences. Cultural history studies those social, cultural, political and religious symbols of a society which give a nomenclature to social formulations in a given group of people belonging to a particular age and time. We can say that the process of classifying distinctive ways of living, languages, scriptures, written material, pictures, music, architecture, value systems, myths and legends, oral archives of Folk-tales and narratives, social customs and rituals, religious practices, symbols and rituals, forms of entertainment, socio-cultural taboos, usage of media: oral or written -all these cultural activities give an identity to a particular set of people, society, race, nation are genuine records of cultural history.

Cultural history also considers notions such as cultural identity, power struggles, class divisions, racial discriminations and socio-cultural or geographical constructs of human beings. We cannot delimit the role of cultural history to traditional concepts of performing, visual, audio-visual verbal forms of cultural portrayals and depictions. Undoubtedly, dance forms, carnivals, epics, stage performances, story -telling, traditional songs, literary works, sculptures, architectural monuments, paintings cinemas music etc. reflect the cultural history of a nation. They symbolize the aspirations, desires and memories of nation and its people. The modern adaptations of cultural representations too like the mass media, digital communication networks describe the formulation of a new modern cultural history.

We can say that society and cultural history defines our socio-cultural evolution. Cultural history which is abstract in nature can be transformed into actions and interactions by human beings. Hence, it involves those cultural achievements and even cultural mistakes which can be passed on to the next generations. During the process of cultural evolution there is a creation and transformation of social roles through new knowledge systems. Whenever there is creation or change of social roles, then it expands and affects the culture of a society. The creative roles require a certain degree of freedom which if denied stifles the process of cultural evolution in a society.

Cultural experiences of creativity, enhancement and preservation of individual identity create opportunities for leisure, entertainment and learning. Signs and symbols of a culture are indicators of power and value systems of a society. Cultural history interprets not only the events of past but also their consequences on society. The interaction between cultural history and society is mutual and continuous. Cultural history shapes a society through collective memories of the past, social self-perceptions of the present and retrieves the essence of humanity for the future.

The concept of Cultural History expresses a new way of approaching and understanding the operative and emotional relationship that a human group with its own past. It is an area of study that aims to embrace a broader field than that of historiography, since it is not only limited to the analysis of academic historical literature. Its scope is to advocate the examination of all the layers and processes of social historical consciousness, paying attention to the agents who create it, the media by means of which it is disseminated, the representations that it popularizes and the creative reception on the part of citizens.

It is also important to mention that cultural history is not a fossilized system of representing the past. It is rather a dynamic process of social dialogue, through which interpretations of the past are disseminated, negotiated and debated. The cultural history of a society therefore includes multiple narratives and different focuses, which strive to impose themselves in social terms. Social debates on the past are extremely important because not only is mere scholarly knowledge of history at stake in them, but also self-understanding of the community in both the present and its future projection.

In the last decade, cultural history has also come to be a term to refer to a whole range of socio-humanistic studies. Specific university undergraduate or postgraduate subjects or programmes and research centres are devoted to. Studies on cultural history and on memory have become a prolific interdisciplinary sphere in which academicians, philosophers, historians, literary theorists, researchers, sociologists and anthropologists come together.

The intellectual shifts of current decades have moved culture to the forefront of academic attention while expanding the practice of history beyond the boundaries of traditional disciplines. The theme of this seminar engages fully with these developments. The seminar focuses on the role of cultural history in the formation of society. We welcome well-researched papers from all disciplines that bring contemporary cultural theories and methodologies to bear on the study of the past, regardless of historical or geographical focus. We also invite papers that reflect on the ways in which more practical environments such as museums and the heritage industry engage with current debates in cultural history.
